Going green all over the globe

As the Irish prepare for the (0) yearly celebrations on St Patrick's Day, Maeve Binchy recalls the many exotic locations (1) _____ she has drowned the shamrock in the past.

“Once upon a time the (2) _____ place to spend St Patrick's Day was Ireland. The pubs were closed and you had the feeling that the (3) _____ world outside was having a great time dyeing things green, putting (4) _____ silly hats while we were like fools here getting bored. But it's a lot better now and there's no (5) _____ to flee for fear of having a dull day in honour of the patron Saint.

I've spent many a St Patrick's Day in the United States, open-mouthed (6) _____ New York City came to a standstill, and astounded in Santa Barbara where Mexican and Chinese bank tellers (7) _____ green hats saying "Kiss Me, I'm Irish". They seemed to be making it into a wonderful carnival and when I (8) _____ to tell people that the only fun we got out of it in Ireland was it was the one day that Lent Didn't Count, they assumed I was (9) _____ a begrudger or insane.

In Third Avenue bars I used to see men weeping into green beer and vowing that one day they (10) _____ go back to Ireland where their grandfathers came from and march in the Irish parades. I prayed they would never see (11) _____ a disappointment compared to what they had on their doorstep over there.

Then, (12) _____ I went to work for The Irish Times in London, I used to have terrific St Patrick's Days altogether. (13) _____ who had half a claim to be Irish would host some kind of party on the day, (14) _____ it has to be said was a perfectly ordinary working day for 90 per cent of the population.

This year it's going to be a bit different again. This year is Israel. (15) _____ with my hugely optimistic outlook about the world, I have to admit that St Patrick doesn't figure largely in the history of Israel, but there will be just (16) _____ Irish there to make sure that we celebrate him in style. I'm looking forward to it. It will be great.
